	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The newly democratic countries of the Arab Spring, including Egypt, Tunisia, and Yemen, are now working to reshape all aspects of the state –including its security, economic, and administrative apparatuses. As they move forward, how should they deal with the pre-revolutionary state and how can they best define their reform goals? • How can these countries balance the demand for revolutionary change in state ministries with the need for continuity and stability? Can they introduce new blood to state institutions while retaining those with actual knowledge of how the state functions? • How should they prioritize accountability for the old regime against the requirements of an inclusive process of reform? Is there a tension between revolutionary demands for reform and the practical moves needed for economic recovery and a functioning state? Speakers: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Ambassador Nabil Fahmy, Dean, Public Affairs College, American University in Cairo • Dr. Rafik Abdessalam, former Minister of Foreign Affairs, Tunisia • Dr. Bernardino Leon, EU Special Representative for the Southern Mediterranean, Spain • Dr. Yassin Said Noaman, Secretary General, Yemen Socialist Party • Michael Posner, former Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor • Nikolay Mladenov, Former Foreign Minister of Bulgaria
